The question of establishing an Astronomical Observatory is being agitated in our sister city now giving a course of Lectures on this beautiful and wondrous science. At one of the lectures lyn would be crowned with a splendid observa, long the enlarged marvals of the starry gently from the north and west, owing to the dense cloud of smoke over the City, that becomes shall be a credit to her enterprise and liberality.

The day is not far distant when a single government will sway the united destinies of one vast Commercial Emporium, in which the benefits and responsibilities will be shared alike. I write from a sense of duty, as I feel certain that it would be a work of wrong to think of erecting an observatory on any other than the best site. Science tory on any other than the best site. Science knows no State or locality. It demands unselfish devotion. Remembering this, I hope that the whole question of location will be fully discussed.

A Death Scene in Kentucky-Further Violence Apprehended.

Versailles, Kv. Nov. 12-3 P.M.

On Saturday last a party of young men, to gether with the Deputy Sheriff of this County, proceeded towards the residence of Edmond Beazley, in the Southern portion of this County, to take him for examination as a lunatic, he being, as it was supposed, a limatic. On arriving at his farm, they halted about three hundred yards from his dwelling house to consult as to the best means to be adopted about arresting him. In the midst of their consultation, Beazley came up, having a pistol in his hand, and ordered them to leave his farm immediately, or he would resort to means that would compel them to do so. They all left with the exception of the Sheriff and a man named Gilpin, Gilpin, when ordered to leave, told drew up his rifle, took deliberate aim, and shot him through the stomach. Beazley walked ten steps and fell. By this time one of the young men of the party, that had been driven off, returned and carried him to the house, where he died in a few minutes. Gilpin gave himself up, and is to be tried this P. M. Much excitement prevails; fears are expressed by some that violence will be done the party who had gone to arrest him.

Like yourself I have been mortified at the conduct of the Bostonians toward George Thompson, The affair disgraces the "Literary Emporium," and in one sense the whole country. To say that it was the work of fifty or sixty hired ruffians only makes the matter worse. Rufflanism, even if there is no personal violence attempted, should be there is no personal violence attempted, should be put down. If the conduct of a few in Boston was disgraceful what shall be said of that of certain Editors, here and elsewhere, who have commended the exhibition and hope George Thompson—will be put down—that the country "will be made too hot for him?" These men have written in dareng ignorance of George Thompson—in daring ignorance of Reform and Reformers in Great Britain. Mr. T. is an Abolitionist; but he is something more than that. In England he is known, not as an Anti-Slavery man, but as a Reformer—a radical Reformer—the determined advocate of the separation of Church and State—the indefatigable laborer in Parliament and out of Parliament radical Reformer—the determined advocate of the separation of Church and State—the indefatigable laborer in Parliament and out of Parliament for "Manbood Suffrage," "Financial Reform" and every measure calculated to benefit the people. What if Mr. Thompson does associate with ultra-Abolitionists here? That is his own business. I am sorry he has had anything to do with that party, yet would be sorry to abuse him for it.

I wish to hear George Thompson speak again. I heard him several times during a residence of a year and shalf in Great Britain, and consider him one of the finest speakers I ever listened to. I never heard him speak on Slavery; yet I have no objection to that subject iffue is disposed to deliver his opinions on it. Surely men of the North are not alraid to hear of Slavery! not ashamed to hear of the blessings of Freedom! George Thompson should be honored by all friends of humanity. His sympathies are not circumscribed by "geographical boundaries." He is the friend of the oppressed, whether down trodden by Britain, Austria, or America. Do Americans know that such treatment as Mr. T. experienced at Fancuil Hall weakens the hands of Reformers in England? The English people are not afraid of free speech, whether the Government may be. BOOK-BINDERS' LEATHER.-The of Brooklyn, and the learned Professor Mitchel is the venerable Dr. Cox, on introducing the Professor to the audience, remarked that the day was not far distant when one of the hights of Brooktory, when all could see by the aid of the powerful lens the enlarged marvels of the starry heavens. I would take exception to this portion, and discuss for a moment the question of location, having been engaged during the past Summer in making observations from various points in the vicinity of this City, in connection with Prof. Rull of the New-York University, and others. The only point where anything like effective work can be executed with instruments of great power under 45° degrees above the horison is on hights west of the Elysian Fields. When the wind blows greatly from the north and west, owing to the dense cloud of smoke over the City, that becomes magnified by the use of powerful glasses, no observation can be made helow 50° on the clearest night from the observatory in Tenth st. and the disturbance is still greater on the east side of Brooklyn, anywhere within five or six miles. From the same cause, also, when the wind is in the south and east the atmosphere is filled with vapor to such a degree that no good work can be performed. Thus, an observatory placed on Brooklyn Hights would be between a smoke and a vapor constantly. It is in no spirit of captiousness that I write, as I know no New-York or Brooklyn interest when a question of science is concerned. New-York owes it to her miscalled commercial position to erect an observatory that shall be a credit to her enterprise and liberality.
